DOCTOR OF NURSING PRACTICE — ADVANCED PRACTICE

PROGRAM DESCRIPTION

Fairfield University's Advanced Practice Doctor of Nursing Practice (DNP) degree is specifically designed to prepare the next generation of Advanced Practice nurses at the doctoral level. Our two-year cohort program is delivered in a hybrid format (taught both online and on campus) – perfect for the clinical professional with a busy schedule.

The Advanced Practice MSN-DNP will give you the skills you need to excel in today's complex, challenging and ever-changing healthcare environment. Our goal is to prepare the next generation of Advanced Practice nurses with a greater breadth of expertise to be healthcare leaders working with our inter-professional clinical partners to enhance safety and quality for our patients. You will acquire the knowledge to create and evaluate innovations to improve healthcare, analyze and apply evidence to improve outcomes, use advocacy skills to affect policy that reduces health inequities, and integrate technology into patient care. Advanced coursework in leadership, systems management, evidence based practice, research translation, population health, informatics and health policy provide the foundation for developing new competencies. Students are required to complete a minimum of 32 credits for the Advanced Practice DNP.

COURSE OF STUDY

Developed for current Advanced Practice registered nurses (APRNs) seeking the DNP, this program offers specialized courses and is designed for a cohort of working clinicians.
